ABSTRACT:

Modern affiliate marketing networks offer a framework for bringing together businesses looking for clients and independent marketers (affiliates) looking for income. To determine which affiliate should be paid a commission at checkout, this strategy relies on web cookies. Scammers exploit this money to their advantage by "stuffing" their own cookies into a user's browser. This study offers a measurement-based description of cookie-stuffing fraud in affiliate marketing online. In order to gather information from the millions of crawled domains that we anticipate would be targeted by dishonest affiliates, we employ a specially developed Chrome extension called Offtrack to detect affiliate cookies. Despite some notable historical precedents, we discovered that cookie-stuffing fraud was generally uncommon in our data set. However, we determine which categories of fraud to target based on the types of fraud we.

INTRODUCTION:

One of the most common advertisements by companies throughout the globe is affiliate marketing. We'll look at this approach to driving traffic and show how powerful it can be for both marketers and companies. A myth about getting paid for nothing exists, which is unfortunate. However, the affiliate marketing industry is the most similar to this not possible utopia. Since this is the case, more than 80% of brands offer affiliate promotion into their plans. Affiliate marketing, though, what is it? In a marketing plan, what function does it serve. Due to the COVID-19 projects, digital marketing is becoming more significant. Companies have to adapt to the new normal and find new methods to make money, which may be through e-mail advertising.

WHAT IS AFFILIATE MARKETING:

Since affiliate marketing deviates from many of the fundamentals of marketing, it's possible that you haven't encountered it before. Because it uses outside sources to produce leads and conversions, it is unique. When an affiliate successfully markets a service or a product from a third party, they are said to have engaged in affiliate marketing. Every time the intended and agreed-upon result is achieved, the affiliate partner (in this example, you), is compensated. You are endorsing someone else's goods while being compensated with a portion of sales made as a result.

HOW IS AFFILIATE MARKETING USED IN A MARKETING STRATEGY:

Digital marketing is incredibly flexible. Multiple different strategies may be implemented, resulting in high rates of traffic from various sources. There is nothing stopping you from launching an affiliate marketing programme while your email marketing strategy and social media efforts are already active. Finding products and promoting them to potential prospects will be the focus of full-time affiliate marketers. Being able to use an affiliate programme without losing out on a sizable reward makes it a low-risk option for them. Only successful outcomes result in them having to pay.

HOW DOES AFFILIATE MARKETING WORK:
